CHES Examination Study Group

The study group fee includes the Self-Study Toolkit (also sold separately...see description in next column), a review of the 7 areas of responsibility including lectures, individual and group activities, worksheets, individual and group activities, time with newly certified health education specialists, additional resources as requested by group members, and (of course) snacks.

Together, we review how to

- Study for/taking the CHES exam
- Assess individual/community needs
- Plan strategies, interventions, and programs
- Implement strategies, interventions, and programs
- Conduct evaluation and research
- Administer strategies, interventions, and programs
- Serve as a resource person
- Communicate and advocate for health education needs, concerns, and resources

Just as importantly, we support and encourage each other and help discover our “inner certified health education specialist” even before we take the exam!

The content covered in the Toolkit and the study group activities cover the body of knowledge (updated 7 Areas of Responsibility published in 2006) as described by the NCHES as tested by the certification exam.

Taking this course (or any other course) does not guarantee a passing score.
